Dear Mr. Jones,

I am seeking legal representation and advice regarding a complex case involving non-consensual possession and possible distribution of intimate digital media by a former political party executive. The matter also involves documented workplace abuse and institutional inaction by the Kansas Democratic Party (KDP).

Brief Summary:

My partner, Ms Amber McIntosh, is the victim of non-consensual creation and retention of intimate digital media by Ben Meers, former Executive Director of the KDP.

There is credible evidence supporting probable cause for illegal distribution under state and federal law, and we have formally demanded deletion and compliance for over six months without response.

The attached Kansas City Star article documents a pattern of workplace abuse by Mr. Meers that was partially corroborated by the party's own investigation, yet no meaningful action was taken by the KDP.

We are exploring all civil options, including potential claims against both the individual and the organizations involved, and are interested in your expertise regarding privacy, digital exploitation, and institutional accountability.

We have already compiled an evidentiary packet that includes 770 videos/images, their full metadata highlighting which files did not originate from any device owned by Amber (establishing probable cause for search warrant), and a full timeline of events and are starting the process of filing criminal complaints in each jurisdiction in which he recorded content involving my partner.

We are starting in Boone County, MO where we currently live and where the content raising the biggest red flag for potential intent to distribute and coercion (videos with professional camera setup in a "casting couch" scenario where Ms McIntosh is notably unenthusiastic and dissociative) was recorded.

Key Questions:

What civil remedies are available for victims in cases like this, especially when the perpetrator is connected to a political organization?

What are the best strategies for pursuing damages, content removal, and/or injunctive relief?

Do you have experience handling cases with significant public or media interest?

I am attaching the relevant news article for background. I am happy to provide a detailed timeline, supporting documentation, and any additional information you may need.

Please let me know your availability for a consultation and your intake process.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Shingi,

I'm so sorry that you and your partner are experiencing this. I would like to be of assistance. Would you like to chat over the weekend or would you prefer after the holiday? I'm available either way.

Sincerely,

Mondaire

Hi Mondaire,

I'm in Central Time - anything from 8am-11am CT would work for me tomorrow (Sunday). Monday same times.

Hi Mondaire,

Are you available to speak today or tomorrow?

Here is a table of contents of the evidentiary package that I will be sending to prosecutors in Boone County, MO, Douglas County, KS, and federal prosecutors today along with my criminal complaint. I have just received communications from Ben Meers and his employer DS Political's attorneys that reveal one or more of a) lies in writing about concerted legal strategies b) evidence tampering/obstruction by the employer c) laughably incompetent attorneying.

This case will be a feast, I am blown away by how inept these guys are about handling a person who refuses to respond and when finally does, fails to deny guilt or even respond to any claims made. Literally just obvious lies and threats that would expose their client's unrefuted culpability to discovery.
