Hello Shingi,

My divorce team has guided me thru the process to gather liquidity for future proceedings. I have approval from Rick Toews for a HELOC in my name. I will be able to pay you out $15k of the equity of the house in Newton and the remainder can be sorted in the divorce proceedings. The equity of the house will be close to $40k but an official assessment is still to be scheduled via Union State Bank. I only have approval for $26k of the total.

It will require us both to be present in front of a notary which we can schedule at the public library once the paperwork is finalized. I'll let you know the date and time for us to meet.

-thanks

Thanks for the update. However, we need to pause the HELOC process until divorce asset division is finalized. Creating new debt against marital property during proceedings complicates equitable distribution and requires mutual consent.

Regarding the October 2024 activity, IRS classification isn't based on subjective intent but objective criteria. The documented evidence shows:

- 19+ hour production timeline across multiple days
- Professional equipment and setup (visible in screenshots)
- Commercial platform presence (verified OnlyFans account)
- Systematic content creation schedule

These factors meet IRS standards for presumptive commercial activity regardless of claimed profit motive. Please provide either:

1. Documentation proving no payments were received from any source, OR
2. Complete records of all payments/compensation received

If you maintain no income was generated, please provide a sworn, notarized affidavit stating this for our tax filing documentation.

Please ensure your divorce team reviews both the HELOC pause and commercial activity disclosure requirements.

This is just signing for the mortgage. You will not be responsible for the loan or the debt.

Added Rick for clarification for you.

Just to be clear, I'm not asking about how the signature process works or who incurs the debt. I'm highlighting that before we can even touch the HELOC, we (i.e. our lawyers) need to calculate all assets and debts to determine total marital asset value. It should be obvious why I would object to high pressure signature requests for loans against marital assets where distribution percentages are unilaterally decided without my participation or without the court's understanding of equitable division.

Only after all assets and liabilities are made known and we have a comprehensive agreed-upon plan for the total, fully disclosed financial picture, can we move forward with any asset modifications like HELOC. IE, only after we've reached asset division settlement. It should be noted that our marital liabilities also include personal loans from my parents, which would likely need to be secured by any HELOC proceeds post-divorce.

Part 2 of why Amber isn't talking to me. She was trying to hustle a HELOC to pay for lawyer fees, and cc'd the banker who pre-qualified her to put pressure on me but didn't realize she had copied him on a thread that included discussion of disclosure of OnlyFans activity. And she didn't seem to understand how improper it was to modify marital assets immediately prior to a divorce.
